Atlanta-area megachurch practices small church hospitality. Share on FacebookShare on Twitter When people walk into Word of Faith Family Worship Cathedral, it feels like home and they feel like they belong. That's what many have told Bishop Dale C. Bronner about their first visit. I've kind of used that theme over the years: A place to believe, a place to belong, a place to stay, Bronner says. I grew up in a family business, and so from day one when I started the service, my whole idea was to just build a family for God. We are connected with purpose, in loving one another, loving God, and being able to serve our fellowmen. Word of Faith, located in Austell, Georgia, about 15 minutes from downtown Atlanta, is a large church, but even people who come from small churches feel like they are being noticed, he says. We're trying to get [visitors] immediately connected to a small group, a disciple group, he says. I want to stand there and greet them after the service. We want a small room that we take them to and serve them refreshments and dialogue with them. We ask them what they got out of the service. We want to find their needs and meet them. We find an itch and itch it. According to 25-year-old Amika Fannin, people are also drawn to Bronner's wisdom. Over the years I've heard a lot of people say they're coming because the wisdom of our bishop, says Fannin, who prayer teams, in small groups and in guest pastoral service service. It's almost as if he was talking right into their situation. The words of faith have found creative ways not only to serve those who come in the doors on Sundays, but the whole community seven days a week. From Outreach Magazine Reverse Retention: Disciple and SendThey collaborate with local schools in the community and provide a summer day camp program for children. When schools closed due to COVID-19, the church served as a place for children who rely on school lunches to pick them up. The church also runs its own private Christian day school for children aged 6 weeks to fifth grade. It serves as a website for free COVID-19 testing, as a voter registration page, and as a place for training 2020 census workers. They also work with the Red Cross to hold more blood stations each year. We're trying to find ways to work with our community leaders and government agencies, he said. And they make sure church-owned buildings don't sit empty Monday to Saturday by opening them up to the community. In fact, for the benefit of the community, the church built a $32-million, state-of-the-art community center on its land across the street from the cathedral and opens it seven days a week. Riverside Epicenter features a gymnasium and fitness center, a bowling alley, a conference center, a video arcade, a food court, coffee and Wi-Fi, a music studio and a performing arts auditorium that has hosted parties, plays and concerts by artists such as Jennifer Hudson. It's really a very, very strong community center, Bronner said. It doesn't look like a church, but a church owns it. It creates a very welcoming bridge and adds enormous value to the wider community that would otherwise never interact with a church in any way. And this year, the church has led its community through the COVID-19 pandemic and the racial tension the United States has experienced. It's really underlined to me that we can't lean on our own understanding, Bronner said. We have to trust in God. And we must be afloat enough in times of uncertainty to stay in touch with the one who never changes. From Outreach Magazine The 3 Nuts and Bolts of the Youth MinistryWhen the coronavirus struck, Faith Words was one of the first churches in the city to move services online to protect the health of its members. And when riots hit many major American cities, Bronner, who is black, joined a march in downtown Atlanta called One Race, featuring blacks and whites and Latinos and Asians under the Banner of Jesus Christ, and has a powerful time of worship, prayer, repentance, working toward racial reconciliation. It was a very beautiful and peaceful event, reclaiming who we are in Christ. He has spoken to other well-known pastors in the Atlanta area, such as Andy Stanley and Louie Giglio, who have been very fertile, Bronner said. I feel very positive. I feel like this could be the smartest church For me, we shine the brightest in the middle of the dark. We are a light called and ordained by God to shine in dark times, so we bring the light of the hope of the gospel of Jesus Christ, that God is with us, God is for us, God is in us. And he's going to follow us through this process and bring us out. It's been a growing time, but I'm hugely hopeful that this could be one of the finest hours for the church. – Jessica Hanewinkel Read more church profiles Here » TROSORD FAMILY WORSHIP CATHEDRALAustell, GeorgiaSenior Pastor: Dale BronnerTwitter: @BishopBronnerWebsite: WOFFamily.orgFounded: 1991Affiliation: NondenominationalLocations: 3Attendance: 7500Growth: +500 (7%)Fastest Growing: 66 Largest: 43 Share on FacebookShare on Twitter Time: Sunday: 7:30 PM ET Address: 212 Riverside Pkwy Austell, GA 30168 Phone: (888) 373-2531 Website: www.woffamily.org Bishop Dale Bronner is the fourth of six sons of the late Mr. Nathaniel Hawthorne Bronner, Sr. and Mrs. Robbie Bronner.
